

I am writing to urge you in the strongest possible terms to take no action that will weaken the Telephone Privacy Law in the State of Indiana. I pay for a telephone for my family's use -- not to provide telemarketers with a means of entry into my home. I don't believe that capitalism requires that every business be given every advantage over every individual right in every circumstance. Before Indiana passed its privacy law I was getting 4-6 calls each evening. The law provided blessed relief from a huge unjustified annoyance and I absolutely do not want to see any measure that weakens that law. With thanks for your consideration: Susan Jones.
